

I believe that the rules should be stricter for newspaper, television, and radio stations. I think many of these companies are doing a disservice to the American people by controlling one market. For example a company like ClearChannel, they give us the same bland radio product. Because they buy most of the channel in most markets, you can go to one city and hear basically the same thing in another city or many times the same city. To me there is no local flair. And to me it also hurts the smaller guys who can not compete with ClearChannel.

Another problem I have is with Comcast. I live in the Philadelphia area and you have no other choice for cable. Most people that I have spoke to complain about Comcast because of the pricing and there is no other service they can go to. A lot of people actually would prefer satellite over Comcast but can not because of Comcast's ownership and broadcasting rights of the Flyers and Sixers.

I believe the rules should be made stricter on companies like these because they are hurting us. We are not getting fair pricing or a great product since there is no other competitor that can rival what a lot of these companies offer. So please find some way to change this.
